

LOVES HER HUSBAND BUT SEEKS DIVORCE ON FRIENDS' ADVICE

Former Washington Woman
Deserted Soon After Her Marriage.

Charging desertion, excessive drinking and non-support, Mrs. Emma Guidet Durvee Auchincloss, who lived in Washington until two years ago, and was socially prominent, will sue her husband, Samuel Sloan Auchincloss, a New York broker, for divorce. This announcement in New York followed a conference between Mrs. Auchincloss and her husband at Sea Bright, N. J. Mrs. Auchincloss, with her three children by a former marriage, has been living at the Buckingham Hotel, Fifth avenue and Fifth street, New York. She attempted to get her husband to rejoin her there, and he replied that his feeling toward her had changed, and intimated that she would not dare divorce him. Her announcement of intended legal proceedings followed.

Mrs. Auchincloss lived in the Pierre Lorillard house in Hiller place, in Washington. There she entertained lavishly. She was well known in diplomatic circles, and is credited with having entertained practically every representative of a foreign government in Washington.

Divorced First Husband.

Her first husband, G. Abel Durvee, was divorced about ten years ago. Mrs. Auchincloss met her second husband at Delmonico's in September, 1910. The broker pressed his suit with much ardor, and they were married at Attleboro, Mass., on November 3, less than two months after their first meeting. Two ceremonies were performed to insure against legal complications arising from Mrs. Auchincloss' divorce. A justice of the peace at Attleboro performed one ceremony, and the Rev. J. Lee Mitchell the other.

After the double ceremony they returned to New York, living at 133 East Fifty-fifth street. One day Mr. Auchincloss disappeared. Inquiry developed the fact that he had gone to England. Shortly she closed the house, placed the household goods in storage and went to the Buckingham to live.

Taking Advice of Friends.
"I am very unwilling to take this step," Mrs. Auchincloss is quoted as saying. "I love my husband very much, and it is because of my great love that I suffer so much. My friends have begged me to take this step, and now I am taking it."

Mrs. Auchincloss was Miss Emma Guidet, daughter of a Belgian man of wealth in New York. She first married G. Abel Durvee, and three children were born, Charles G. Durvee, now twenty-one years old; Miss Marie Durvee, who was a Washington debutante, two or three years ago; and Agnes G. Durvee.

After obtaining a divorce from her first husband she went abroad, living in Paris for eight years and traveling in France and Italy. On her return to America she came to Washington.

Mr. Auchincloss, who is much younger than his wife, was married once before. His first wife died several years ago.

Veteran Chemist

JOHN W. MALLET.

DR. JOHN MALLET LONG LEADER IN CHEMISTRY STUDY

University of Virginia Professor Teaches Subject for Half Century.

While all of the several hundred world-famous chemists who come to Washington for a visit tomorrow, prior to the meeting of the Eighth International Congress of Applied Chemistry in New York, beginning Friday, have interesting careers, there are none, perhaps, whose lives read more like a romance than does that of Dr. John W. Mallet, of the University of Virginia.

He is regarded as the "grand old man of chemistry," teaching it continuously since 1856, save only for the period when he served in the Confederate army.

After Dr. Mallet had enlisted in the Confederate army it was discovered he was an expert when it came to making powder and high explosives. He was made superintendent of the ordnance factory of the Confederacy. Often when the Federals felt sure that they had cut off the supply of all materials with which the noted chemist and scientist had to make powder, he used his knowledge in applying substances found throughout the surrounding country.

Dr. Mallet is known almost as well throughout the foreign countries as he is in America. He is now in his eightieth year.

CAMPAIGN BOOK PUT OUT BY DEMOCRATS

Blames Tariff for High Cost of Living—Steel Trust Is Discussed.

Issued much earlier than usual, the Democratic campaign textbook made its appearance here yesterday. It consists of 400 pages and covers the topics of tariff and trusts as discussed at length. The high cost of living is dealt with and blame is laid on the tariff. The Harvester trust and the relations of George W. Perkins, who is one of its directors, and Colonel Roosevelt, are discussed. The Steel Trust is treated through extracts from the Stanley report.

"The True Roosevelt," by President Taft, and "The True Taft," by Colonel Roosevelt, are chapters in the book. A life of Governor Wilson, by William Bayard Hale is a feature.

Robert Wickliffe Woolley was the editor in charge of the work.

ALL YEAR SESSION OF CONGRESS MUST COME, SAYS BOURNE

Oregon Senator Predicts Pressure of Public Business Will Demand It.

Hereafter Congress must remain in session almost the whole year round, according to the prediction of Senator Jonathan Bourne, Jr., of Oregon, today. "It looks to me," said the Senator, "that the pressure of public business and the needs of the country will require that the national Legislature sit almost continuously in Washington. This year Congress has been in session about nine months and next year and all succeeding years I look for the same conditions to prevail. Important problems in popular government remain to be solved and it will take a long time each year to consider them intelligently and in such a manner as to satisfy the public. The people demand that we give their interests earnest consideration and it will take most of the time available each year to meet their demands.

"When we have worked out the problems of campaigning, and popular nominations, it will not be necessary for Congressmen and Senators to leave their desks in Washington to present reasons to their constituents why they should be returned to office. We must devise some way of informing the electors of the respective merits of candidates for office, that is, some medium of publicity for their records and personal platforms that will obviate the necessity of their spending large amounts of time and money to convey their ideas to the voters. When that is done there will be no necessity of any legislator being absent from his duties here for any length of time and only in case public business requires his presence in his own district or constituency."

Girl Fugitive Is Returned to Home

Ethel Reed, seventeen years old, who had been held by the police as a fugitive from her parents, was taken back to her home in Chambersburg, Pa., this afternoon. The girl is the daughter of Smith Reed, a railroad fireman. Accompanied by another girl of about her own age, Ethel left home nearly two weeks ago. They visited Harpers Ferry and other places, landing in Washington a week ago. Returning from a trip to Chesapeake Beach Sunday night, the girl was taken ill and removed to the Casualty Hospital where the physicians learned that she had run away from home.

The police were notified and she was sent to the House of Detention pending arrangements for her return to Chambersburg.
